

THE UNIVERSITY OF PITTSBURGH SCHOOL OF EDUCATION'S CENTER FOR URBAN EDUCATION PRESENTS

The Stories We Tell

Transforming Narratives About "Other People's Children"

Tuesday, March 20, 2018 • 4:30 - 6:30 p.m.

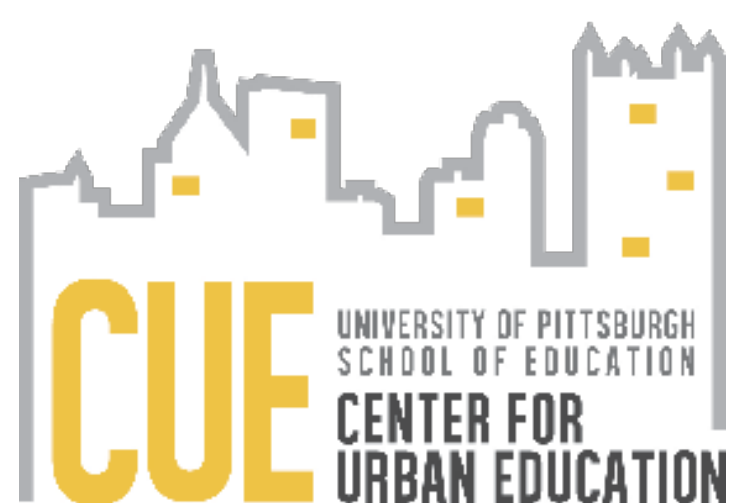

The University Club • Ballroom B • 123 University Place

Presented by Lisa Delpit, EdD

The stories our country tells us about students of color distort our perceptions and create self-fulfilling stereotypes of poor academic performance. If we change our stories, we can change both the ways we think about children and the ways children think about themselves. Increasing student performance is not just a matter of increasing rigor. We must develop a different set of lenses to really see the brilliance in the children before us.

This event is free and open to the public, though registration is appreciated. A reception will follow the lecture.

Register at: cue.pitt.edu/delpit

UNIVERSITY OF PITTSBURGH
SCHOOL OF EDUCATION

THE HEINZ ENDOWMENTS

cue.pitt.edu • @PittCUE • #CUEtalks

Dr. Lisa Delpit is an internationally known writer and scholar whose work on the education of children of color has earned her numerous accolades, including a MacArthur Fellowship, and achievement awards from AERA, Harvard Graduate School of Education and Antioch College. She is the Felton G. Clark Distinguished Professor of Education at Southern University in her native Baton Rouge, La. Her publications include "Other People's Children" and "Multiplication is for White People," which are read widely in teacher education and professional development programs.