

How to Find, Choose, and Pay For High-Quality Child Care: A Guide for Families

Choosing child care for the young children in your life can be less stressful if you know what to look for when determining whether or not a program is “high-quality”.

Here’s what to look for:

Caregivers who:

- communicate through talk and touch, songs, and stories
- engage at the child’s level, sitting, squatting, or laying on the floor
- use a warm and supportive tone of voice while addressing behavior or redirecting attention

Classrooms and settings that include:

- organized, clean, and accessible materials for children to select without adult assistance
- a variety of materials available for all types of play:
  - physical—developing gross and fine motor skills
  - object—sensory tables with rice, sand, or water, loose parts play
  - dramatic—costumes, housekeeping, or kitchen objects
  - constructive—art materials, blocks
  - games with rules—fingerplays to music or books, board games

Curriculum:

- play-based and allows for exploration, creativity, and inquiry

Family Engagement that includes:

- an open-door policy for family members to drop-in
- regular updates about a child’s day
- special events, family nights, and programming in the evenings or on weekends

Designations like:

- Pennsylvania Keystone STARS*
  - licensed child care programs in Pennsylvania have a state rating from STAR 1 through 4; STAR 3 and STAR 4 are considered “high quality”
- National Accreditations*
  - additional markers of “high quality”
    - National Association for the Education of Young Children (NAEYC)
    - National Association of Family Child Care (NAFCC)
- Pre-K Counts and Head Start (in schools or community-based settings)

* Note that only licensed child care programs may participate in these ratings systems.

Now that you know how to determine if a program is high-quality, it is time to find programs that meet your location, time, and transportation needs. Below are several resources to support your search.
